REAL ESTATE TRENDS

MOBs Have Become Healthcare's Hottest Commodity

There were nearly 300 MOB deals across the top 50 U.S. metro areas in the fourth quarter of 2025 – a 78.6% increase year over year and a 110.4% jump quarter over quarter. That increase trend has spilled over into the first few months of 2026.

Closing The Access Gap: 6 Strategies to Redraw the Patient Care Map

For rural healthcare organizations, access has become the central organizing principle behind nearly every strategic decision. The challenge runs deeper than geography alone. In response, rural leaders are redesigning not just where but how care is delivered — through virtual-first workflows, expanded ambulatory and community-based care sites, stronger data-sharing and new partnerships that ease patients' access to services while extending scarce clinical capacity.

Why Texas' Supply Problem in Medical Office Matters More Than Some May Think

For years, the investment narrative around medical office as an asset class has been simple: stable demand, recession-resistant tenants and steady growth driven by the shift to outpatient care. That narrative is still true, but it's incomplete. What's shaping the next phase of healthcare real estate isn't just demand. It's a growing imbalance on the supply side. And in markets like Texas, that imbalance is becoming even more pronounced.
